others on the subject. He wrote, therefore, to his college men and educators throughout the country and to prominent educators in the South, and the sentiment was found to be overwhelmingly in favor of the multiple list.

"There is no doubt in my mind," he wrote, "that the educational sentiment of this country is clearly in favor of the multiple list."

Unintentionally Unfair.

Professor Bowles said that some of the comparisons made by the committee as to the prices of school books had been unintentionally unfair. He cited as an example a geography, which is sold at a higher price in Virginia than in North Carolina. He said the Virginia book contained thirty-four pages more than the one sold in North Carolina.

"If I were going to invest an electrical appliance," he said, "I would not go back and forth with the things done by Franklin. I would assume all to be accounted for, and then add upon it, and the experience of the most advanced states in that the single list is not the best possible for a practical operation."

Witness thought there would be no trouble in securing the single list prices under a multiple list adoption.

Discussing the question of adoption, Mr. Byrd asked the witness if in a certain case when only one reader was left on in the board the multiple list had resulted in any economy, the latter having previously said that the adoption under the multiple system had resulted in a saving of about $100,000.

"Possibly not," was the reply. "We had not had time to get the list made."

Mr. Byrd cited a number of changes, and the witness admitted that as to individual cases there had been no considerable economy.

"Now in the high school list did you make many changes?"

"We left nearly everything on and put on others. We gave them practically an open list as to high schools."

Questions of Prices.

"Are you aware that in the single list the exchange price is very much less than in Virginia?"

"No, sir."

"Well, we'll take graded schools. In North Carolina the exchange price is 20 cents and in Virginia 12 cents, and so on through the list. As a matter of fact, Mr. Bowles, did your board pay any attention to the question of price in the adoption?"

"We know the thing when for the board of education, and then we stipulated in the contract that we should get books at the same price at which they were sold in other states having the multiple list."

Professor Bowles said he had rather inclined to the single list, but he wished to get the benefit of the experience of

and Mary College?"

"I couldn't tell you; that is not in my department."

"What is your department?"

"American history and politics."

Dr. Tyler said he had dropped "Pike's History" because the author was too nationalistic in his tone.

"I am a great State's rights man," he continued.

Coming back to the book adoption, Mr. Strode asked the witness if it was possible to reduce prices through investigation, should these investigations be made, and he said he thought so, but that the board had not the time to go into such detail. Dr. Tyler thought free books would encourage the attendance upon the schools, but he did not think children would be kept away by a slight difference in prices. He thought the campaigns made by book agents were beneficial to the people.

"They have taught me a great deal," he said.
